Man Under Glass

This one is really a shocker! As people walk along the hallway in the haunted house, suddenly a light comes on and a ghoul that can be seen through a sheet of plexiglass growls at the audience from beneath their feet! This always makes them jump. It is (of course) only effective in complete darkness.

To construct this, you are going to have to build a platform off of the floor high enough and large enough for an average person to fit underneath (see the illustration). The side ramps will be made from plywood and the entire top of the platform is to be made of THICK plexiglass. It has to be very thick because several people may be walking on it at any given time. Inside of the enclosure, mount a few lights (red is great for this effect) hooked up to a light switch that the ghoul has access to. When the audience walks on the platform, the ghoul flips the light switch and growls at them.
